

MODIFIERS: FORM AND POSITION

Modifiers are words and phrases that flesh out sentence patterns. The basic patterns can give us a bare-bones statement: “The bird sang.” Modifiers help answer additional questions like “What kind? How? When? Where? Why?”

1. Single-word modifiers are of two types. Adjectives have their most common position before a noun to tell us “What kind?”; a straight answer, a wonderful party, a huge debt, a green thumb, an unforgettable performance. They also appear after linking verbs. These are be (am, is, are, was, were) and verbs that tell us how things appear to our senses.

The waves were high. (high waves)

His voice sounded hoarse. (a hoarse voice)

The bottle is empty. (an empty bottle)

The milk tasted sour. (sour milk)

The grass looked green. (green grass)

The water seemed cold. (cold-water)

Adverbs have their most common position after action verbs to tell us how something is done: sang sweetly, answered eagerly, ate rapidly, fought desperately, asked timidly. Most adverbs simply add the -ly ending to an adjective. But not all do: “A good musician plays well.” Notice that we use adverbs before another modifier to answer questions like “How much?” or “To what extent?”

Adverb + Adjective: We had a surprisingly large crowd.

Adverb + Adverb: I knew him fairly well.

Formal written English requires a more frequent use of distinctive adverb forms than everyday conversation; sang loudly, drove slowly, aged considerably, stepped carefully.

Faulty: He plays the piano very good.

Revised: He plays the piano very well.

Faulty: He still speaks English very bad.

Revised: He still speaks English very badly.

Informal English uses real, awful, pretty, mighty, and plenty as intensifiers preceding other modifiers. In formal written English substitute very, fairly, or extremely.

Informal: Joan has become real popular.

Formal: Joan has become very popular.

Informal: We had a pretty good team this year.

Formal: We had a fairly good team this year.

2. Modifiers modify different things depending on their position in a sentence. “I asked only my aunt for a loan” means that you asked nobody besides your aunt. “I asked my aunt for a loan only” means that you did not ask for a gift. One type of easily misplaced modifier is the prepositional phrase (in a hurry, on the spot, with regret, by accident, at the station).

Misplaced: He slit open the trout he had caught with a knife. (Caught with a knife?)

Revised: With a knife, he slit open the trout he had caught. (Slit with a knife.)

Dangling: At the age of nine, my grandmother visited us. (A none-year-old grandmother?)

Revised: When I was nine years old, my grandmother visited us.

3. Modifiers may be verbals like smiling or to smile. You then have to show who does the smiling: Smiling proudly, she showed us the letter.

Satisfactory: Singing, the campers put up their tents.

Misplaced: Singing, the tents were put up by the campers. (singing tents?)

Dangling: Singing, the tents were put up. (Who was singing?)

Verbals combine with other material in a verbal phrase. Like a verbal standing by itself, a verbal phrase needs to point clearly to what it is supposed to modify.

Dangling: To obtain good grades, hard work is essential. (Who obtains good grades?)

Revised: To obtain good grades, a student must work hard.

- A. Which of these sentences are adjectives and adverbs as required in formal written English? Mark sentences S (for satisfactory) or U (for unsatisfactory) in the box to the right.

1. Falling from the slippery roof, he hurt himself badly. _____
2. As the questions continued, the lecturer sounded more and more impatient. _____
3. The characters in many current movies speak and act fairly realistic. _____
4. The interview with the star of the show proved real disappointing. _____
5. Most drivers drive too careless most of the time. _____
6. The director stubbornly insisted on using a real lion. _____
7. We had the car fixed, but the engine still does not run good. _____
8. We easily talked the man into giving us a real bargain. _____

9. The plans looked beautiful on paper, but progress has been awful slow. _____
10. The downtown area has changed considerable. _____
- B. Mark sentences S (for satisfactory), DM (unsatisfactory because of a dangling modifier), or MM (unsatisfactory because of a misplaced modifier).
11. The island had a museum for tourists with shrunken heads. _____
12. Being a normal youth, I was bored by domestic chores. _____
13. Hope and doubt are the emotions one feels when answering the phone. _____
14. While walking on concrete, the clicking of shoes is very audible. _____
15. When talking a bath, a radio should never be left close to the tub. _____
16. By assigning question-and-answer problems, students are not asked to think. _____
17. Having grown up in a mining town, my mother never liked the bid city. _____
18. The picture was described as the best ever painted by my art teacher. _____
19. The escaped lion was captures before anyone was injured by its keepers. _____
20. By glancing over the magazine rack in any drugstore, many magazines can be classified as wither men's magazines or women's magazines. _____